

CHILDREN GET BIG ESTATE.

Dennis R. Christopher Will's Valuable Property to Heirs.

MANY MARRIAGE LICENSES.

UNIONTOWN, June 19.—The will of Dennis R. Christopher, late of Luzerne township, was entered for probate this morning by his son, Elliott Christopher, who has been made executor. The estate is valued at between $15,000 and $20,000 and besides other real estate consists of a 133-acre farm in Monaca township and 100 acres of coal lands in Doddridge county, West Virginia. The will states that the testator is not indebted to any of his children and if any make an attempt to break the will they are to be disinherited. The property is then bequeathed in equal amounts to his nine children.

There are but four more marriage license blanks left in docket book No. 45. The last license issued yesterday was numbered 20,276, which is the total number of licenses granted since 1865, when the docket was commenced. The Commissioners will have a new one in time for the Fourth of July rush.

An assumption claim was filed this morning by Attorney R. S. Matthews on behalf of the Citizens' National Bank against V. H. Higbee, J. N. Slesley and V. H. Solsona.

G. Sterling and A. C. Rhoads. The action is brought for the use of the Woods Lloyd Company and is to recover on a promissory note given for 60 days.

On behalf of the same plaintiff on the same note an action to recover a like amount has been filed for James B. Sterling, one of the plaintiffs in the above action, was an endorser up on the note.

Church Adds Members.

Deep interest was manifested in the special services which were held in the United Presbyterian church last evening, and eleven new members were added to the congregation. Rev. J. D. Hutchman preached a very interesting sermon on the text "Let the Redeemed of the Lord Say So." He will also speak this evening at 7:15 o'clock and a general invitation is extended to all to come and enjoy the services. The communion services on Sabbath morning will be of special interest as it will be the last service of this nature held in the present church by the congregation. KIT CARSON.

Feat of Which the Hardy Frontiersman Had No Recollection.

One of the most noted of the hardy western frontiersmen was Kit Carson, to whom with Daniel Boone belongs the credit of having always dealt fairly with the various Indian tribes, as they themselves are known. The withdrawal of Carson by the government was the cause of a great war. The Old Santa Fe trail relates an amusing incident of the gallant pioneer.

My own conception of Kit Carson as a child was that he was ten feet high that it would have required the strength of two men to lift his side that he usually drank a river and picked the carcass of a whole buffalo as an easily as a hair does the wing of a quail. Years after, when I made the acquaintance of the foremost frontiersman I found him a delicate, intelligent, unassuming man, the very opposite type of what my children's brain had created.

One day while Kit was at the fort I came across a periodical that had a full page illustration of a scene in a forest. In the foreground stood a gigantic figure dressed in the traditional buckskin.

On one arm rested an immense rifle. His other arm was around the waist of the conventional female of such sensational journals while in front half a dozen Indians lay prone, evidently slain by the hero in the most possible attitude in defense of the posterous female. The legend stated that all this had been effected by Kit Carson.

I handed it to Kit. He wiped his spectacles, studied the picture intently for a few seconds and then said: "Gentlemen that that may be true but I have not no recollection of it."

He is a complete surprise to Mr. Bettler and was arranged by his wife and Mrs. Homer Stairs. All the appointments and decorations were carried out in the colors of red and green. There were many guests at the celebration and the evening was most enjoyable. The principal division of the evening was the singing of songs and the playing of music. COKERS TAKE LAST OF SERIES FROM MILLERS IN CLOSE GAME.

Connellsville played rings around Scottsdale yesterday afternoon and won out in a close score 2 to 1. Scottsdale hit the ball often and as hard as the Cokers but could not connect with men on bases. In the fourth, seventh and ninth innings a safe single would have won the game and probably won it, but there was nothing doing for the Millers.

Wallace and Cotter pitched for the locals and Reeper for the home team. In the fifth inning when McKenna beat out a bunt down the first base line, Wallace became enraged at Umpire Goshier's decision and threw his glove at him, whereupon he was ejected to the bench. Cotter had not had much chance at warming up but handled himself creditably during the remaining innings. Reeper pitched good ball for Scottsdale but was hit hard when McKenna threw his glove at him. Cotter had not had much chance at warming up but handled himself creditably during the remaining innings. Reeper pitched good ball for Scottsdale but was hit hard when McKenna threw his glove at him.

Connellsville started the band wagon in the first. Jacobson worked Reeper for a free ticket to first and Price was safe when Reeper threw his intended sacrifice to second. Elmer flew out to third base and Birmingham knocked Jacobson in with one that was too hot for Reeper. The Cokers came back again in the fourth with another one. After Tiffany was on the bench Smith to Conavery. Pfeiffer landed one of his famous two-baggers to the middle field fence. Layton went out pitcher to first and Pfeiffer took third on the play. Wallace drove one in the same place that Pfeiffer did and the latter scored with what proved to be the winning run of the game.

Scottsdale scored in the fifth but was nipped in the neck before they could get two around the circuit. McKenna started the fireworks with a bunt down the first base line which put Wallace out of the game. Cotter hit Slevin on the foot and his Ump's allowed him to go down. Reeper came on deck with a sacrifice which sent both runners up a peg and Ferguson proved Johnny on the spot by slamming a clean single to left on which McKenna scored. Quick fielding by Jacobson and Price caught Slevin at the home plate. O'Connor received a pass, but James, with an opportunity to win the game, popped one up to Tiffany.

Scottsdale and Clarkburg are scheduled to play a double header tomorrow afternoon, the first game beginning at 2 o'clock. The score:

West Virginians Easy Money for the Count's Seats.

UNIONTOWN, June 18.—Uniontown bugged Clarkburg here yesterday afternoon, running up nine runs on the Drummers before the Moguls could garner three. Miller for Clarkburg was hit all over the lot for 13 bingles. Hilley and Price were the big hitters for the Ontons, each having three. The score by innings:

CHARLEROI ON TOP.

CHARLEROI, June 18.—Patrick was right on the job for the Rats here yesterday afternoon and Charleroi received the long end of a 4 to 3 score. Fairmont played errorless ball while the Rats made five errors. None of them were costly. The score by innings:

CHARLEROI	AB.	R.	E.	W.	L.	P.

Baseball Babbie.

Nearly fourth place.

We'll be in fourth place after tomorrow.

Uniontown, U. R. next.

Uniontown has saved Oom Paul Kruger for today's fray.

Connellsville played errorless ball at Scottsdale yesterday. Price was the bright fielding star, having five assists and four putouts.

Wallace batted 1.000 until he was out of the game. Cotter also batted at the highest possible mark.

There will probably be a special car to Farmerville this afternoon. If over 1,000 Connellsville rooters go we will get credit for having 300 at the game.

In a slow, uninteresting game the Mod Island bunch of baseball players defeated the Ontons 15 to 0. Union-

THE PORT OF MISSING MEN

By MEREDITH NICHOLSON.

Author of "The House of a Thousand Candles"

COPYRIGHT, 1937, BY THE BOBBE-MERRILL COMPANY

"You will go to that corner," and the Servian translated for his prisoner's benefit with a gesture of the revolver.

"Anything to please you, worthy fellow?" replied Armitage, and he obeyed with amiable alacrity. The man's object was to get him as far from the inner door as possible while he called help from above, which was, of course, the wisest thing from his point of view, as Armitage recognized.

Armitage stood with his back against a rack of pots. The table was at his left and beyond it the door opening upon the court. A barred window was at his right. Opposite him was another door that communicated with the interior of the house and disclosed the lower steps of a rude stairway leading upward. The Servian now closed and locked the outer kitchen door with care.

Armitage had lost his hat in the area; his light walking stick lay in the middle of the floor; his liveries coat hung wet and bedraggled about him; his shirt was crumpled and soiled. But his air of good humor and his tame acceptance of capture seemed to increase the Servian's caution, and he backed away toward the inner door with his revolver still pointed at Armitage's head.

He began calling lustily up the narrow stairwell in Servian, changing in a moment to German. He made a ludicrous figure, as he held his revolver at arm's length, craning his neck into the passage and howling until he was red in the face. He paused to listen, then renewed his cries, while Armitage, with his back against the rack of pots, studied the room and made his plans.

"There is a thief here! I have caught a thief!" yelled the Servian, now exasperated by the silence above. Then, as he relaxed a moment and turned to make sure that his revolver still covered Armitage, there was a sudden sound of steps above, and a voice bawled angrily down the stairway: "Zmal, stop your noise and tell me what's the trouble."

It was the voice of Durand speaking in the Servian dialect, and Zmal opened his mouth to explain.

As the big fellow roared his reply Armitage snatched from the rack a heavy iron rolling pin, swung it high by the ball with both hands and let it sy with all his might at the Servian's head, upturned in the earnestness of his bawling. On the instant the revolver roared loudly in the narrow kitchen, and Armitage seized the brass lamp and flung it from him upon the hearth, where it fell with a great clatter without exploding.

It was instantly pitch dark. The Servian had gone down like a felled ox, and Armitage, at the threshold, leaped over him into the hall past the rear stairs, down which the men were stumbling, cursing volubly as they came.

Armitage had assumed the existence of a front stairway, and now that he was launched upon an unexpected adventure he was in a humor to prolong it for a moment even at further risk. He crept along a dark passage to the front door, found and turned the key to provide himself with a ready exit, then, as he heard the men from above stumble over the prostrate Servian, he bounded up the front stairway, gained the second floor, then the third and readily found by its light the room that he had observed earlier from the outside.

Below there was smothered confusion and the crackling of matches as Durand and Chauvenet sought to grasp the unexpected situation that confronted them. The big servant, Armitage knew, would hardly be able to clear matters for them at once, and he hurriedly turned over the packets of papers that lay on the table. On the back of each had been printed with a rubber stamp the words: "Vienna, Paris, Washington. Chauvenet et Durand."

Armitage snatched up the coat which Chauvenet had so carefully placed on the back of his chair, ran his hands through the pockets, found them empty, then gathered the garment tightly in his hands, laughed a little to himself to feel the papers sewn into the lining and laughed again as he tore the lining loose and drew forth a fat scold of red wax. Steps sounded below. A man was running up the back stairs, and from the kitchen rose sounds of mighty gruntings and curnings in the heavy gutturals of the Servian, as he rejoined his wife and sought to explain his plight.

Armitage picked up a chair, ran noiselessly to the head of the back stairs and looked down upon Chauvenet who was hurrying up with a flaming candle held high above his head, its light showing anxiety and fear upon his face. He was halfway up the last flight, and Armitage stood in the dark, watching him with a mixture of curiosity and something, too, of humor.

Then he spoke—in French—in a tone that indicated the cool irony he had noted in Durand's tone: "A few murders more or less? But Von Strobel was hardly a fair mark, dearest Jules!"

With this he sent the chair clattering down the steps, where it struck Jules Chauvenet's legs with a force that earned him howling loudly backward to the second landing.

Armitage turned and sped down the front stairway, hearing renewed clamor from the rear and cries of rage and pain from the second story. In fumbling for the front door he found a hat and, having lost his own, placed it upon his head, drew his liveries coat about his shoulders and went quickly out. A moment later he slipped the catch in the wall door and stepped into the boulevard.

The stars were shining among the flying clouds overhead, and he drew deep breaths of the freshened air into his lungs as he walked back to the Monte Rosa. Occasionally he laughed quietly to himself, for he still grasped tightly in his hand, safe under his coat, the envelope which Chauvenet had carried so very carefully concealed, and several times Armitage muttered to himself:

"A few murders, more or less!" At the hotel he changed his clothes, threw the things from his dressing table into a bag and announced his departure for Paris by the midnight express.

As he drove to the railway station he felt for his cigarette case and discovered that it was missing. The loss evidently gave him great concern, for he searched and researched his pockets and opened his bags at the station to see if he had by any chance overlooked it, but it was not to be found anywhere.

His annoyance at the loss was balanced, could he have known it, by the interest with which, almost before the wall door had closed upon him, two gentlemen, one of them still in his shirt sleeves and with a purple lump over his forehead, bent over a gold cigarette case in the dark house on the Boulevard Froissant.

It was a pretty twilight and contained when found on the kitchen floor exactly four cigarettes of excellent Swedish tobacco. On one side of it was etched in shining of blue and white enamel a helmet, surmounted by a falcon poised for flight, and beneath the motto "Fide Non Armis." The back bore in English script, written large, the letters "F. A."

The man stared at each other wondering for an instant, then both leaped to their feet. "It isn't possible!" gasped Durand. "It is quite possible," replied Chauvenet. "The emblem is unmistakable. Good God, look!"

The sweat had broken out on Chauvenet's face, and he leaped to the chair where his coat hung and caught up the garment with shuddering hands. The silk lining fluttered loose where Armitage had roughly torn out the envelope.

"Who is he? Who is he?" whispered Durand, very white of face. "It may be—it must be some one deeply concerned."

Chauvenet paused, drawing his hand across his forehead slowly. Then the color leaped back into his face, and he caught Durand's arm so tight that the man flinched.

"There has been a man following me about. I thought he was interested in the Clabornes. He's here. I am sure I saw him at the Monte Rosa tonight. God!"

He dropped his head from Durand's arm and struck the table fiercely with his clenched hand.

"John Armitage—John Armitage! I heard his name in Florence."

His eyes were snapping with excitement, and amazement grew in his face.

"Who is John Armitage?" demanded Durand sharply, but Chauvenet stared at him in stupefaction for a tense moment, then muttered to himself:

"Is it possible? Is it possible?" And his voice was hoarse, and his hand trembled as he picked up the cigarette case.

"My dear Jules, you act as though you had seen a ghost. Who the devil is Armitage?"

Chauvenet glanced about the room cautiously, then bent forward and whispered very low close to Durand's ear:

"Suppose he were the son of the crazy Karl? Suppose he were Frederick Augustus?"

"Bah! It's impossible! What is your man Armitage like?" asked Durand excitedly.

"He is the right age. He is a big fellow and has quite an air. He seems to be without occupation."

"Clearly so," remarked Durand ironically. "But he has evidently been watching us. Quite possibly the lamented Strobel employed him. He may have seen Strobel here."

Chauvenet again struck the table smartly.

"Of course he would see Strobel! Strobel was the architect's friend. Strobel and this fellow between them."

"Strobel is dead. The architect is dead. There can be no matter of doubt of that," said Durand, but doubt was in his tone and in his eyes.

"Nothing is certain. It would be like Karl to turn up again with a son to back his old tricks. He may be living. This Armitage is not the ordinary pig of a secret agent. We must find him."

"And quickly. There must be—"

—another death added to our little list before we entrust the masters of the situation in Vienna."

"They gave Zmal orders to remain on guard at the house and went hurriedly out together."

Chapter VI

TOWARD THE WESTERN STARS.

GENEVA is a good point to any part of the world, for there at the top of Europe the whole continental railway system is easily within your grasp and you may make your choice of sailing ports. It is, to be sure, rather out of your way to seek a ship at Liverpool unless you expect to get some particular advantage in doing so. Mr. John Armitage hurried thither in the most breathless haste to catch the King Edward, whereas the night before he had taken the train to the Clabornes and saved himself, a mad scamp, but his satisfaction in finding himself at about the King Edward was supreme. He was and is, it may be said, a man who salutes the passing days with a smile, no matter how slender their claims.

Shirley Claborne and Captain Richard Claborne, her brother, were on deck watching the shipping in the Mery as the big steamer swung into the channel.

"I hope," observed Dick, "that we have shaken off all your transatlantic suitors. That little Chauvenet died earlier than I had expected. He never turned up after we left Florence, but I'm not wholly sure that we shan't find him at the dock in New York and that mysterious sailing, who speak so much of his way of following us about and who almost bought you a watch in Geneva, really disappoints me. His persistence had actually compelled my attention. For a glass blower he was fairly decent, though, and better than a lot of these little toy men with imitation titles."

"Oh, my large brother, I have a confession to make," said Shirley. "Please don't indulge in great oaths or stamp a hole in this sturdy deck, but there are flowers in my stateroom."

"Probably from the Liverpool consul. He's been pestering father to help him get a transfer to a less gloomy hole."

"Then I shall interfere myself with the president when I get home. They are orchids—from London—but with Mr. Armitage's card. Wouldn't that excite you?"

"It makes me sick," and Dick hung heavily on the rail and glared at a passing tug.

"They are beautiful orchids. I don't remember when orchids have happened to me before. Richard—in such quantities. Now, you really didn't disapprove of him so much, did you? This is probably goodby forever, but he wasn't so bad, and he may be an American, after all."

"A common adventurer! Such fellows are always turning up, like bad pennies or a one-eyed dog. If I should see him again!"

"Yes, Richard, if you should meet again!"

"I'd ask him to be good enough to stop following me about, and if he persists I should miss him up."

"Yes, I'm sure you would protect me from his importunities at any hazard," mocked Shirley, turning and leaning against the rail so that she looked along the deck beyond her brother's startled shoulders.

"Don't be silly," observed Dick, whose eyes were upon a trim yacht that was steaming slowly beneath them.

"I shan't, but please don't be violent! Do not murder the poor man, Dickie,
